

Contributors

Henri Acselrad is professor in the Institute for Urban and Regional Research at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), and researcher at the Brazilian National Council for Scientific Development. He writes on environmental conflicts and planning. Editor of Revista Brasileira de Estudos Urbanos e Regionais, and former editor of Cadernos, his PhD was earned in economics at the University of Paris I (Panthéon-Sorbonne)(France).

Scott A. Bollens is professor of urban and regional planning and research affiliate in the Centre for Global Peace and Conflict Studies at the University of California, Irvine (USA). A PhD graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (USA), his research concerns ethnicity and public policy, regionalism and intergovernmental planning.

Dick Cobb is lecturer in environmental sciences and researcher in the Centre for Environmental Risk at University of East Anglia (UK). His research concerns agricultural and rural policy, and environmental legislation and accountability.

Mercedes Di Virgilio is a member of the faculty of the Institute of Urban Areas at General Sarmiento National University (Argentina). She holds a bachelor's degree in sociology and a master's degree in research in social sciences, both from the University of Buenos Aires (Argentina), and has been a visiting scholar at the University of Texas at Austin (USA).

Paul M. Dolman is lecturer in ecology at the University of East Anglia (UK). His primary interest has always been in biodiversity conservation and predicting the consequences of environmental and land-use change. Specialising in population analysis, spatial and landscape ecology he also works in interdisciplinary programmes such as the work presented in this volume Leonardo Fernández is research assistant at the Urban Institute of the General Sarmiento National University (Argentina).

x List of contributors

Jill Grant is professor and director of the School of Planning at Dalhousie University (Canada). Her research focuses on residential environments and the cultural context of community planning. She is the editor of Plan Canada, the professional journal of the Canadian Institute of Planners (CIP), and serves on the editorial boards of the Journal of the American Planning Association and Landscape and Urban Planning journal. Her article on mixed use won a CIP Award for Impact on the Profession.

Thomas L. Harper is professor and director of the Planning Programme, Faculty of Environmental Design at the University of Calgary (Canada). His interdisciplinary research, done collaboratively with Stanley Stein, focuses on normative planning theory. Professor Harper is past president of the Association of Canadian University Planning Programs, and is currently that association's representative to the Global Planning Education Associations Network. He holds the professional designation 'Member of the Canadian Institute of Planners', and has worked with a variety of clients, community, educational and religious organizations.

Tazim B. Jamal is assistant professor of recreation, park and tourism sciences, at Texas A&M University (USA). A PhD graduate of the University of Calgary (Canada), her primary research areas are on community-based planning for sustainable tourism and heritage tourism development. Related to the planning process, she also conducts participatory research in projects involving multi-stakeholder processes for addressing tourism-related conflict and natural resource sustainability.

Juan D. Lombardo is associate professor and head of the Department of Urbanism at General Sarmiento National University (Argentina), and Vice-President of the Association of Latin American Schools of Urbanism and Planning. Holder of a doctorate in urbanism from the University of Aachen (Germany), he has served on the faculties of the University of Aachen and the University of Rosario (Argentina), as well as consultant to UNESCO. His publications have appeared in Argentina and abroad.

Andrew Lovett is senior lecturer in environmental sciences at University of East Anglia (UK). A PhD graduate of University College Wales, Aberystwyth (UK), his research concerns geographic information systems, environmental epidemiology and hazardous waste disposal.

Raine Mäntysalo teaches strategic and participatory urban planning in the Department of Architecture, University of Oulu (Finland). Currently he manages multi-disciplinary research projects concerned with sustainability of growing and declining urban areas and participatory rural planning. His doctoral thesis 'Land-use Planning as Inter-organizational Learning' was completed in 2000 at the University of Oulu.

Tim O'Riordan is professor of environmental sciences at the University of East Anglia (UK). He has completed extensive research on landscapes and is currently working on governance for sustainable development. He is a member of the UK Sustainable Development Commission, a Deputy Lieutenant of the County of Norfolk, and a fellow of the British Academy, a society for advancement of the humanities and the social sciences.

Leonie Sandercock is professor in urban planning and social policy in the School of Community and Regional Planning at University of British Columbia (Canada), where she chairs the PhD programme. She writes on planning theory and history, multicultural planning, participatory planning, and the importance of stories and storytelling in planners' work. She is an editor of Planning Theory & Practice.

Glen Searle is senior lecturer in urban planning at the University of Technology, Sydney (Australia). He was previously deputy manager of policy in the New South Wales Department of Planning and senior research officer in the UK Department of the Environment. Articles editor of Urban Policy and Research, his research is primarily concerned with the political economy of Sydney's recent planning and secondarily with the urban functioning of advanced economy industry clusters.

Stanley M. Stein is senior instructor of philosophy in the Faculty of Environmental Design at the University of Calgary (Canada). He has published on the practical implications of philosophical and ethical aspects of planning theory, the ethical and economic justifications of government intervention, environmental ethics, social institutions, and theories of aesthetics and design. His recent work seeks to articulate a theoretical basis for a broadly communicative ('dialogical') approach for public planning.

Bruce Stiftel is professor of urban and regional planning at Florida State University (USA). He writes on collaborative processes in environmental decision-making, as well as the development of urban planning educational institutions. He was editor of the Journal of Planning Education and Research, and president of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Planning. A fellow of the American Institute of Certified Planners, currently, he serves as co-chair of the Global Planning Education Association Network.

Karen Umemoto is associate professor in the Department of Urban and Regional Planning at the University of Hawaii at Manoa (USA). Her academic focus is planning and governance in a multicultural society. Her research areas include community planning, race relations, community development and urban violence. She also works with various public and non-profit organizations in strategic planning and community development.

xii List of contributors

Vanessa Watson is professor in the City and Regional Planning Programme and deputy director of the School of Architecture, Planning and Geomatics at the University of Cape Town (South Africa). She writes on planning theory and researches in the area of planning practices in Africa. She is the winner of the 2003 South African Distinguished Women in Science Award, and represents the Association of African Planning Schools on the Global Planning Education Association Network.

Jiantao Zhang graduated from the University of Liverpool (UK) and currently a post-doctoral research assistant in the Urban Planning Department of Tongji University (China). His research concerns urban morphology and urban design, urban policy analysis, urban conservation and regeneration. He is the member of International Seminar on Urban Form (ISUF).

